To Consumptives.

Wilbor's Cod-Liver Oil and Lime has now been before the public twenty years, and has steadily grown in ravor and appreciation. This could not be the case unless the preparation was of high intrinsic value. The combination of the Phosphate of Lime with pure Cod-Liver Oil, as prepared by Dr. Wilbor, has produced a new phase in the treatment of Consumption and all thesaes of the Lungs. This article can be taken by the most deficate invalid without creating the disgusting nauses which is such an objection to the Cod-Liver Oil when taken without Lime. It is prescribed by the regular faculty. Sold by the proprietor, A. B. Wilbou, Chemist, Boston, and by all druggists. druggists.

It might be well to premise this brief description with the statement that Mile. Rice's beauty is queenly. She is taller than the European stars referred to above. Her head is exquisitely shaped, and crowned with a Her head is exquisitely shaped, and crowned with a heavy sult of durk, almost black, hair; her face is delicately but clearly cut; her dark eyes brilliant as her diamonds; and her mouth might have served as an original model for the bow of Cupid. Her countenance moves with every cindlon, and is refined, intelligent, and expressive to a high degree. Her form is lithe, graceful, and charmingly molded, all of which personal attributes combine to call forth the homage received by her.

Five years of her life were spent in a bright, vivacious, and piquant—a Pariseme to her glove tips. Five years of her life were spent in a convent, where she displayed a great taste in literature and remarkable proficiency in music. She evinced a strong taste for the drama, and occasionally appeared in amateur recitals at the request of friends among the arbibility. Ten years ago Charles Pechter heard her recite and urged her to adopt the singe as a profession. Acting upon his advice and recommendation, Rhea placed herself under Roamvallet, in the Paris Conservatoire. She made her debut at Reussels, in the comedy of "Pairy Finners," and remained in that city a year. She then went to Bouen, and from thence to Paris, being received in both places with great celat. Afterward, when starring Prance, she received letters from Paris calling her to the Imperial Theatre. After the assessmation of her patron she left itusels on account of Nithilistic threats and went to England. She studied the English language but one month before appearing in "Much Ade About Nothing." Other parts were added to her repertoire, and sic at once became the attraction of the island. IN AMERICA. With each appearance here Mile, Rhea's popularity ma grown, taking the Kustern cities by storm. At New Haven she accompanied Governor Ingersoll's ghter's to Yale College, and a recess was taken in order that the professors and students might be pre-ented. By request she called on Henry W. Longful-ow and resided to him one of his poems, completely winning the poet's heart.

Scribe's absorbing drama, "Adrienne," was pre-ented at Whitney's last night with Mile, libea as Adrieune Lecouvreur. It was an impersonation the nest striking, qualities in which were regal magnificence of bearing, overwhelming tragic power, and an aimest unerring application of the player's art to the development of every phase of this interesting character. While it is by no means a "dry-goods play," the costumes worn by all of the dramatis personn, and especially Mile. Rhea, were more gorgeous than ever before seen in this city in connection with any theatrical event. The robe worn by her in the third act is a marvel of richness and elaborateness wholly indescribable by the profine pen of man. Throughout the play the dresse were nearly all beautiful and minutely faithful to the period of the action. In the character of Adrience Mile, Rhea treads with majestic step a very wide dramatic range—now keeping ence of bearing, overwhelming tragic power, and an e step a very wide dramatic range-now keeping time to the gentle rippling of the brook and again beating desperately against the tragic forrent. Her scenes in the green room of the Comedie Francaise were superty exemplifications of sharply contrasting passions, and her invocation to Cornellie was delivered with an effect that thrilled every auditor on whose ear fell the music of that entrancing volce. As an expression of bate born of peatousy the encounter with the Princess, in the latter's relace, with reference to the secret which both women are endeavoring to probe, afforded an opportunity which Mile. Blue manipulated with surpassing brillinger, and which had its elimax and its contrast simultaneously in the thrilling recitation with which the scene closes. me to the gentle rippling of the brook and aga Her treatment of the episode of the casket returned with Adrience's withered flowers was inexpressibly with Adrience's withered flowers was hiexpressibly touching and fine—the cutward manifestation of a breaking heart, whose agenies were felt in some de-gree by those who were mersily witnesses of the strug-gle—and all not real, but merely art. She touched her highest point of excellence in this impersonation in the last scene of all, during the delirium wrought by the poisoned flowers. Her reading of the love of Payelse to the imaginary Maurice was both startling and matches—now weetly musical and worder, and and pathetic—now sweetly musical and wooding, and now again, when her thought is turned upon her cruel rival, remoraeless, passionale, terrible. Her cry for like, in the very moment of dissolution, was in cry for the, in the very moment of dissolution, was in thesi a tragedy—more appailing than the last look of a drowning man who sinks forever under the waters— —a try in which were blended frenzy, love, despair, and terror. Saturday afternoot, after the matines, she was greeted by a large crowd of ladies and gentlemen who, moved by carlosity, were walting to see how the beautiful actress looked in street dress. The exhibition was somewhat amusing, and evidently not at all displeasing to the Mademoissille, as she thoused the crowd for a round of applicates which greeted her appearances. She will leave the city to morrow morning to play through this fetate. The company is reheavelog an adaptation of a French play entitled "Dion de Lys." which has never bean produced in this country. The theme is the old and not altogether commendable one—martial infidelity.
